NOTES OF NEW YORK THEATRES

In the parlance of the first nighters who gathered to receive Lillian Russell in her new comedy, "The Widow's Might," in New York the past week, the consensus of opinion was that the fair Lillian wins again. Edmond Day's comedy of Wall Street, which is her central vehicle for the present, turns out the play that permits Miss Russell to shine in new surroundings with all the charm and feminine graces that have long combined to make her an institution on the American stage.

A surprising element of her new character which was particularly noted was that the former Queen of comic opera has ripened in her art as a comedienne and the fact of most note was the splendid advancement she has made in this difficult branch of art. Her development has added to her poise and charm, and withal her piece to success and by force of her personality and wonderful stage presence made it a decided hit.

There is always an element of a Russell production which makes it task the more difficult. Long recognized as the peer of her sisters in stage land, her feminine admirers look to the story for a lead in the procession in sartorial embellishment of her characters. The role entrusted to her is opportune in this, but even blazer first nighters were startled by the Parisian gowns that Miss Russell brought over for her use this season. They constitute an array of wearing apparel too wonderful to permit of detailed description. They are the newest styles to be had and pretty enough to make one envious were they worn by any other than Lillian Russell. The first dress is a shopping costume of gray Liberty satin trimmed in silver lace and natural lynx fur. It is a pretty combination of Napoleon and Director effects, with a tri-cockade hat of the First Empire period that sets off Miss Russell's radiant beauty. Her second act presents a dress of a different nature, a white Liberty satin with plaited skirt and made effective by its simplicity of outline. The design is known in the theatre as the "Parisian" and is a modern in treatment. The gown is studded with rhinestones and arc en ciel (rainbow) plectrums. The sleeves are a work of art, with a wide band of white Liberty satin with plaited skirt and made effective by its simplicity of outline.

The third act is a ball room scene and here Miss Russell wears a wonderful creation of blue and gold brocade with a draped bodice and a long and hung in Grecian folds with the aim of silhouetting the figure without accentuating the waist too strongly. There is a wide band of gold crocheted lace. The neck and sleeves are of Venetian point. For the final act Miss Russell wears a carriage dress of white cloth with a satin hem around the bottom. Over this is a Byzantine coat of transparent Russian scroll lace embroidered with silver. Her head dress is a simple and effective of turban and Russian toque of moonlight blue velvet with an osprey at the side of the same shade. This is the most extreme of the new millinery, consisting of folds upon folds of the same texture that winds about the head and extends down in the back to the collar, hiding all the hair excepting a fringe that shows over the left temple.

Fannie Ward will open her season in America in a play by Forrest Halsey and Lee Arthur entitled "Van Allen's Wife." H. Reeves Smith has been chosen as her leading man. Miss Ward's London season was a personal success. Her development in her chosen field of endeavor has been such that she is now a recognized star. Her life falls in pleasant paths and happiness comes to her. In the midst of her contentment she again becomes a plaything of the unforgiveness and is forced out of the warmth of her husband's home and her child's heart to take up the life of paying the penalty for the misdeeds of others. The company will be carefully selected and the play staged with taste and discretion.

The next production to be made by Klaw & Branger and Joseph Brooks will be "The Barrier," which opens in Rochester the latter part of this month. Eugene Presbury, who has dramatized Rex Beach's novel, is rehearsing the players. The dramatization is in three acts. The strongest situations in the novel have been retained and the plot closely followed. All of the characters of the novel will appear in the play. Theodore Roberts will play the part of John Gale and W. S. Hart is cast as Don Stark. Florence Rockwell will assume the part of Nedra. Other members of the cast are Richard Thornton, Alphonse Ethier, Guinio Socola, John J. Fier.

Klaw & Branger's "Little Nemo" has opened its season in Syracuse. The receipts for the week broke all records of the house. Several new faces appear in the cast. Joseph C. Thorn was a hit as Dr. Pill, and Master Gabriel in the title role won everybody's heart with his portrayal of the little dreamer. Harry Kelly's dry humor brought forth laughter and Harry Clay Blaney as Pip was excellent. Miss Almee Ehrlich as the Princess was repeatedly encoored and Miss Natalie Alie handled her part acceptably. Madeline Marshall played her old part with spiritfulness. "Little Nemo" is on its way West to play the Middle West territory before going South after the holidays.

Klaw & Branger have given McIntyre and Hartz the best show these two clever comedians have ever had. They will leave New York with the prestige of a successful engagement in the John McNeill comedy, "In Hayti." Jerome and Schwartz have supplied in the songs, "Romeo and Juliet," and "Busy Lizzy," two melodies that will be whistled wherever lips can pucker and hearts are light. There are one hundred persons in the cast and the chorus is not only pretty, but can really sing.

"The Round Up," with Rapley Homes in the role of "Slim" Hoover, had a remarkable engagement in Boston, playing to big receipts as it did on its two previous visits. Klaw & Branger have made a big production of the drama of the Arizona desert for its first long road tour and engaged a splendid acting cast. The play will remain in New England for a number of weeks, and will follow its journey through the South and to the Pacific Coast.

TALK NO. 423
A MISTAKE
There is a popular opinion that glasses should never be worn as long as the eye can possibly get along without them. There was never a greater mistake. The very first symptoms of defective eyesight—the first indication of fatigue—should be recognized as Nature's call for help. To persist in forcing the eyes to perform work too great for their endurance is simply an abuse of the most precious sense we have. We believe that a greater percentage of cataracts and other diseases of the eye are brought about by this strain from all other sources combined. If you have the slightest suspicion that your eyes are not perfectly correct, we want to look them over. We want you to feel at liberty to consult us at any time. If you need glasses we will make them for you at a reasonable price. If not, we will charge you nothing.

THREE STEAMERS BRING NEWARK EAGLES ON VISIT

Seldom has any other city sent such a delegation of visitors to Bridgeport as came yesterday when it took three steamers to bring 3,000 members of the Newark Aerie, Eagles, and their friends. The majestic was the first to arrive. She was followed by the Newark, and she by the Orient.

The visitors many of them went out to see the war ships in the harbor. Others visited the parks. A feature of the day was the presentation of a mounted eagle to the local aerie. The bird is a handsome specimen of his kind and of the taxidermist's art. The demand for post cards showing views of the city and its parks was enormous. At Hartung's drug store 500 stamps were sold in a few minutes and all the stamps were used on cards. A large number of the Newark Aerie have promised to come to the carnival of the Bridgeport Aerie, which is soon to be given.
